

SENATH SENTINEL - (Continued)

In a front page article entitled simply "Senath", the editor again makes us aware of his pride in his town:

We have frequently said many good things about Senath, but we have not said anything too good. It is a matter of comment abroad about what a good little town this is. Taken from every view point, Senath is a well regulated town, her citizens are not divided into warring factions, and if perchance individuals disagree the hatchet is soon buried, and good friendship prevails.

The streets are fairly well kept up, and most of the sidewalks are substantial. The city dads are harmonious, and no one shirks his duty. The Mayor and Board are laborers and therefore in close sympathy with the needs of the people, and while they labor daily for the support of their families, they yet give their time and attention to the city. Senath knows no such thing as a house of ill fame, and a prostitute never dreams of stopping here.

Church and Sunday school are well attended. Surrounding Senath is the best farming country in Dunklin County settled for the most part by men who own their farms, which condition always tend to make a good country and those who do not own land are in a prosperous, contented condition. All in all in Senath has cause to be proud, and her citizens should leave nothing undone that would tend to the upbuilding and advancement of the town.

There were the organizations:

Senath Camp No. 259, Woodmen of the World initiated into their forest Friday night two new Woodmen, Messrs. F. E. Ruff and John Whitlock. This camp is about the strongest in number of membership of any in south east Missouri and is still growing larger. The camp owns its

The obituaries:

COKE BLANCHARD

C. B. (Coke) Blanchard died at his home three miles north of Senath April 3rd, 1906, of pneumonia. Mr. Blanchard was about 50 years of age, and was among the pioneers in Dunklin County.

The politics:

-- As soon as the railroads cut off free passes, the Republican representatives jumped on the railroads with practical unanimity and are now further demonstrating their courage by kicking decrepit government clerks.

And, of course, the ads:
